Be cautious to only use these official channels to avoid scams.

Email Support

In rare cases, Trust Wallet may offer email support, usually for more technical issues. Check the official website for updated contact emails and never trust unsolicited emails claiming to be from Trust Wallet support.

Beware of Trust Wallet Support Scams

Unfortunately, the popularity of Trust Wallet has attracted scammers who pretend to be official support representatives. Here's how to stay safe:

Trust Wallet will never ask for your private keys, recovery phrase, or passwords. These are secrets that should always stay with you.

Avoid phone numbers and email addresses from third-party websites, social media posts, or random forums. These are often fake.

Never install remote desktop software or grant screen sharing to anyone claiming to be Trust Wallet support. This is a common scam technique.

Be wary of unsolicited messages or calls offering help. Always initiate contact through official channels.

What to Do if You've Been Scammed

If you think you've been targeted by a scam claiming to be Trust Wallet support:

Stop all communications immediately.

Never share any more personal or wallet information.

Report the scam to Trust Wallet's official channels and the platform where the scam occurred (e.g., social media site, app store).

Consider moving any remaining funds to a new wallet if you believe your private keys or recovery phrase have been compromised.
